Committee Hearings – Week in Review
Tuesday

The Senate Higher Education Committee and House Higher Education Committee heard presentations on the University of Minnesota and Minnesota State’s bonding requests. The University of Minnesota has a capital budget request of $317.2 million, with $200 million in HEAPR. Minnesota State is requesting $230.8 million, with $150 million in HEAPR. Minnesota State also has an additional $54 million request, HF3087.

The House Education Policy Committee heard an informational presentation on the findings from The Violence Project’s Mass Shooter Database. It was an extremely fascinating presentation. Some of their findings include that hardening of schools is less effective than properly funding school counselors and intervention methods. Over 90% of school mass shooters were current or former students of the school, so for the future, this means that the majority of shooters will be familiar with the hardening measures within the school, as well as the drills determining what happens in case of emergency. The doctors presenting also believe that for children and teens, active-shooter drills can create a fascination in school shootings.

Wednesday
The House Higher Education Committee heard HF583 (Huot)- student loan refinancing eligibility expanded, and money appropriated. This bill expands the eligibility criteria for the Office of Higher Education’s SELF Refi program, which refines the student loans of Minnesota residents. The bill was amended to update outdated dates, which was necessary because the bill was introduced last year. It was laid over for further consideration.
